The following claim amendments are for the purpose of discussion only and are not to be entered.

1. A method of designating items as available to share in a computer system between a sharer that makes items available and a sharee that views the items that were made available comprising:

executing on the sharer's computer a query comprising a scope and a criteria, wherein the scope and the criteria are submitted by the user of the sharer's computer; creating on the sharer's computer a list with a plurality of referenced items based on the results of said query; defining the contents of one or more virtual folders on the sharer's computer based on the list, the one or more virtual folders configured to be manipulated by an action of at least the sharer, said manipulation is at least one of dragging, copying and pasting, making the contents of the one or more virtual folders available for sharing with the sharee, thereby making the results of said query available to the sharee; and sharing at least a portion of the one or more virtual folders with a sharee such that the sharee is provided with access to the referenced items from the sharee's computer.

Differences between cited art and claim with possible amendments

There are several differences between claim 1 and the combination of references cited by the Office. For example, the combination of references does not teach "executing on the sharer's compute a query comprising a scope and a criteria, wherein the scope and the criteria are submitted by the user of the sharer's computer" as recited in claim 1. The Office correctly notes that the Huang reference does not describe this limitation. See Office Action dated June 26, 2008, p5. As described previously, the Pearson reference describes submitting search criteria on a sharee's computer (referred to as the querying host 102 in the Pearson reference Fig. 4) that is in turn sent to the sharer's computer (queried host 104 in Fig. 4). The sharer computer then conducts a search and returns a list of items that satisfy the search criteria. See Pearson reference [0030]. Thus, "the scope and the criteria" are not submitted by the user of the sharer's computer, but by the user of the sharee's computer. This is the opposite of the limitation described above. Further, the search in the Pearson reference is conducted over content that has already been designated for sharing. Accordingly, the combination of references does not describe "executing on the sharer's compute a query comprising a scope and a criteria, wherein the scope and the criteria are submitted by the user of the sharer's computer."
